DDA Memo, 4 Apr 77

30 June 1952

Auth: DDA REG. 77/1763

Date: 240378 By: 025

TO: Acting Deputy Director (Administration)

FROM: Chief, Organization and Methods Service

SUBJECT: Proposed Change in Designations of Agency Components.

1. THE PROBLEM. Should the present names of CIA offices be changed, for security reasons, to new names or to numbers?
2. DISCUSSION AND CONCLUSIONS.
 - a. Designation of offices by numerals seems on first thought to offer greater security than designation by letters, which by their very nature indicate identities. This security advantage, however, would be greatly reduced by the fact that few people remember numerals, and therefore a large number of indexes would have to be distributed throughout the Agency.
 - b. For the very reason that people would not remember numbers their use imposes administrative difficulties. Most people would have to be constantly referring to an index for the numerical designation of an office.
 - c. Changing the name of offices and the corresponding letter symbols would be a disturbing factor, particularly on the level of stenographers, typists, couriers, messengers, etc. The Deputy Director (Intelligence) is opposed to such change for his offices and the Deputy Director (Plans) similarly opposes changing the names of any of his offices for security reasons except the Office of Policy Coordination. The names of certain other offices under the Deputy Director (Plans) are being changed in accordance with a general reorganization of the covert offices but security is not a factor in such changes.
 - d. Even with the current titles of offices, there is still some confusion as to alphabetical designation. There never has been published a regulation making official the identification symbols commonly used.
 - e. The growth of the Agency makes advisable the extension of symbols, at least down to divisions to assist in the routing of correspondence, etc. Because of frequent changes this should be intra-office only.

3. RECOMMENDATIONS. It is recommended that:

- a. Numerical identification not be adopted.
- b. The present names and letter symbols be continued for all offices except for OPC, unless Inspection and Security receives indications that a change is advisable.
- c. That Annex "A" be published as a regulation making the letter symbols pertaining to the offices official. (The necessary change for OPC and any other changes due to reorganization will be made as directed by the DD/P. Organization and Methods Service will assist in the work of devising symbols for divisions and branches.
